Relief From the First.

When a person has suffered the untold agonies of rheumatism and neuralgia twenty-two years, when physicians have failed, and when aliniment cures at one application, the fact ought to cause thinking people to pause and consider if a bottle of it ought not to be in immediate readiness in every household for the instant cure of the aches and pains that afflict mankind. The disgrace brought upon him by the misconduct of his wife, from whom he had been divorced three years ago, still weighed upon his mind, and it was a subject to which he frequently alluded in the privacy of his home. He was an only child, and the only heir of his father. Immediately after the tragedy there was a disposition to blame Mr. Stephens, especially among the young men of the village, as in some way responsible for the affair. Stephens is a good-looking young Englishman, very popular with the ladies, and has but recently come to Red Bank. He appears to be very much overcome by the loss of his friend, and tells a very straightforward narrative of his acquaintance with Miss Westcott, and the young doctor. There is no doubt in his mind that Curry looked upon him as a rival and intended t make a double murder and suicide as a result of his sudden love turned to sudden hate. The persistent invitations by Curry for Stephens to accompany him on his Mon day evening visits to Miss Westcott are now booked upon as part of his scheme to make a triple tragedy.

Miss Westcott now talks freely of the ocurrence and is disposed to speak only good words for her departed admirer. She says that he was always gentlemanly in his behavior to her, but that she looked upon him only as a pleasant acquaintance with whom to sing, dance, drive and boat during he stay at Newman Springs, and that Mr. Stephens is in the same category. She looked upon them as mutual friends, and while she enjoyed the society of each, she made n rticular favorite of either. Mrs. West ott, her mother, went down from this city and had a talk with Mrs. Curry, the mother of the snicide.
